North Korea's Threat to both Beijing and Washington & the Need for a New, Concerted Approach to Resolving the North Korean Nuclear Dilemma

Date: 9 February 2017 (Thursday)

Time: 2:00 pm – 4:00 pm

Venue: AM310, 3/F Amenities Building, Lingnan University

Speaker

Professor Gregory Moore

Head of School of International Studies,
University of Nottingham Ningbo, China

North Korea's nuclear program is a threat to both Beijing and Washington. Both are against it. Yet North Korea has defied both, and the international community, since the mid 1990s and has pushed forward with a robust nuclear weapons program. The effort to stop North Korea from becoming a fully operational nuclear-weapons state has been protracted and frustrating to both China and the United States. The surprise tests of two nuclear devices in 2016 alone, combined with numerous ballistic missile tests, suggest that Pyongyang may be close to being capable of delivering nuclear weapons atop such missiles. “Preemptive recognition” of North Korea by the US might achieve a denuclearized Korean Peninsula, is something Beijing would support, and is something the new US president, Donald Trump, should consider.
