Measurement of Learning Outcomes

Case study preparation and engagement 30% ILOs 1-3	30% of students' final grade will be given according to students' weekly case study preparation and participation. Students will be asked to prepare applied case studies for the four main areas of comparative social policy analysis, i.e. (1) ageing, families, and social policy; (2) education and youth transition; (3) health, wellbeing and social care; (4) welfare regimes and governance, based on selected literature provided by the course instructor. The applied case study will present the foundation for weekly group tasks and in-class discussions accompanying weekly lectures. By training the students' ability to use detailed case evidence as the basis of analytical policy evaluations, they will gain more confidence in linking theoretical and applied knowledge (ILO1); better appreciate the various roles of governance in different institutional contexts (ILO2), and gain a more detailed understanding of implementation issues of major social policies locally, nationally, and internationally (ILO3).
Case study report 70% ILOs 1-3	One case study report of not more than 5,000 words. <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Students will be asked to read three articles that detail background and context of a particular policy case study. Reflecting on these articles students will:<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Identify and critically analyse the key changes in governance attempted in the case.</li><li>• Assess the strengths and drawbacks of the government's approach.</li></ul></li><li>• In completing the case study report, students will draw on literature, frameworks, theories and other cases studies covered in the course.</li><li>• Grading is based on the case study report's content (understanding of topic, use of evidence, critical analysis) (60%), structure of argument (20%), and style (writing and referencing) (20%).</li></ul>
